

Much has been written about the 2020 US Presidential Election, some of which is highly political opinion and some of which seems to have been made up. It does not matter which side the author supports the writings seem to be very one-sided and lacking of facts. I lived and worked through those years and desire to record my thoughts on this topic for my children from my very unique point of view.

I worked for the Department of Defense for more than 30 years and before I retired I had risen in my career to be a senior analyst, a senior systems engineer, and a mid-level administrator with a nation-wide reputation in my field. But, what I will write will be personal analysis and opinion certainly not based on any special data I may have had access to in my career.

I remember the 9/11 attacks very vividly. I have no inside information on those attacks, but I watched the planes hit the Twin Towers live and was traumatized as was a great many people in the world. I had just been given a new assignment at work which was supposed to help Government organizations communicate better and because of that assignment I led a group of employees in briefing the 9/11 Commission on our efforts to make sure we never had another 9/11-like attack.

My efforts in that area were not terribly successful because in my opinion I never really had the top support to do what was needed. I spent my remaining years at work trying to secure Government data, but was defeated at every point along the way because Government didn't seem to want to win that battle.

Before I left Government, I ran or co-ran two different nation-wide working groups which could have helped our nation solve many of the problems we still face today, but lack of support from both higher and lower elements stood in the way of success. In the end, I retired with little to show for my efforts.

While living in the DC area, I drove the Capital Beltway every week and around election time I loved the play analyst comparing the number of bumper stickers for one candidate versus another. I remember the 2016 election had a great number of both Clinton and Trump stickers traveling around the Beltway. I knew the election would be close because of that one fact.

Also around that time a major leak of Government information happened. Because of the information that was leaked did not seem to be well understood by the media, my organization was unfairly accused of spying on America. I knew that we were not spying on America, both because it would be against the law and also because we didn't have the resources to do so. Something else had to be going on if there were any truth in the reports.

Later Mr. Trump told the press that someone was listening into his campaign staff's communications and again America thought that we were again guilty. I started at that point to figure out that some other Government organizations had to be doing something that would cause these problems, but I knew it wasn't my organization. As an aside, it was about that time that I attended a briefing by another organization on practices that seemed to me as both looking like my organization would look if we were running that program and also seemingly a bit illegal. I questioned the legality of the program and was banned from returning to that organization's place of work.

During the 2020 election, my bumper sticker analysis didn't make sense to me. There were no Biden stickers, but I saw many Trump stickers and signs. In my opinion there was no chance of a Biden win, because I saw no Biden campaign. I remember the day, many months after the election that I finally saw my first Biden sticker. It was in Astoria, Oregon, not on the Capital Beltway.

I, along with many other Americans, were very much in disbelief after the 2020 election. I did not understand how a candidate who did not campaign could win with a record amount of votes, the media and members of my family told me that there was no fraud and they would not entertain a discussion of the topic, the case was closed. No one seemed interested in looking at the situation, even from a non political point of view. Social media I was told did not want have the discussion either. No one wanted any talk.

Returning now to the pre election period, I had wondered how one party could even run Mr. Biden. He was seeming involved with Mr. Obama and Mrs. Clinton in working a virtual Watergate like break in of another party's campaign headquarters. That would be a felony and would make Mr. Biden ineligible to run for president. Mr. Trump declassified all documents relating to that activity and I felt that there was very little room for Mr. Biden to get free of that crime. But, again America did not understand the issues, or they just didn't care. The break in was ignored and the election went on.

America also did not question the pandemic at first. It was clear to me that the pandemic was: 1. A bio attack, and 2. Not as deadly as was probably planned. Later news seemed to show that the American public had possibly even paid for the bio attack. The pandemic was used as a watt increase mail in voting, which some say led to even greater election fraud.

I believe that there was election fraud and that Mr. Biden did not really win the 2020 election. I know I am not supposed to say this, but I feel I must say what I believe. I was ready to support Mr. Biden if he had really won, but I never could believe that he did. I am not one who sees the return of Mr. Trump as the second coming of a Savior, but I think he could do a lot better than what has happened.

The question now is how do we proceed from the place we have found ourselves in? How do we fix a broken Government?
